'No' to Highway 125 access

by Lindy Magner

City Council will just say "no thank you" to any access ramps within the city for the Highway 125 expansion planned for Lemon Grove and Spring Valley in the next four years, and told CalTrans officials so at Monday night's council meeting.

Following Mayor Brain Cochran's lead, the council voted unanimously to oppose any on/off ramps within the city, as well as to send an official letter to Caltrans expressing those views.

"We didn't expect that," said Caltrans project manager Mark Leja following the meeting in which he presented two proposed "variations" analyzed in the now-circulating draft Environmental Impact Statement (EIS).

Highway 125 "variation #2" would include a full access interchange at Ildica, near Mt. Miguel High School and a full interchange at Jamacha Blvd.

Variation #3, a response to much concern expressed by residents in the Ildica/Blossom Lane neighborhood and Spring Valley residents, would eliminate the Ildica interchange and place a half-diamond interchange at Troy, with a full interchange at Jamacha Rd. and a full interchange just south of Jamacha Blvd.

The original highway design, which called for full interchanges at all locations, was scraped when traffic studies showed the interchanges were too close together to facilitate traffic flow, and violated the federal and state standard requiring all interchanges to be spaced at least one mile apart.

The two newer alternatives were presented to the City Council last February, with only minor changes made since then, said Leja. At that informal presentation, city council members indicated they would prefer no on-off ramps in the city and would like Caltrans to study what effect such a stance would have.

According to Leja, Caltrans did conduct such studies though they were not included in the EIS.

"As a result of their request in February, we analyzed what the traffic impacts would be without those ramps - we felt that we needed more access than we'd get without them," he said. Cochran requested to see those studies.

"I would like to know what brought ramps at Troy and Palm back into the picture - we thought they had been eliminated," he added. Though the city had previously informed Leja it would prefer no on or off ramps at all within the city, he was surprised that councilmembers officially took this position Monday night.

"It's invaluable that they could reach a consensus on this and we will take it into consideration," he said, adding that bypassing the city exit-wise would not hinder the highway's efficiency.

"Removing the Troy/Palm ramps will only make the highway more efficient by eliminating additional weaving and congestion," he said "My understanding is that the city doesn't want the additional traffic which goes along with highway access."

During the design process, residents from neighborhoods effected by the increased traffic have been quite vocal. And, again, Monday night, residents from the Ildica/Blossom and Golden Avenue neighborhoods spoke at the meeting.

Kathy Aymar, one of about 20 Golden Avenue residents present Monday night, expressed concern that her "nice, quit street" will become a thruway and that children attending the elementary and middle schools nearby would be exposed to increased traffic risks by an interchange at Troy and Palm. That interchange, proposed in variation # 3, would take out about five homes, according to Leja.

Representing her neighborhood, Blossom Lane resident Leslie Whaling detailed concerns over the excess traffic and dangers to students walking to nearby Mt. Miguel High School and other schools in the area which a full interchange placed at Ildica could bring.

Leja explained that residents wishing to express concerns which would then be addressed by the final environmental document should either attend the Dec. 9 meeting anytime between 3 and 8 p.m. at the Spring Valley Community Center to discuss their concerns with a Caltrans representative, or write a letter to Caltrans.

Leja also briefly touched on several issues addressed by the environmental document, including how highway-generated noise would be mitigated. Some of the proposed 6 to 8-foot sound walls would ideally be constructed on private property, said Leja, though such construction would be dependent on the permission of the property owners.

"We would hope for a continuous wall, but we won't be condemning property to get sound protection," he said, adding that Caltrans staff would be surveying neighborhoods to determine if they wanted sound walls and were willing to have them on private property.

Teresa Wells, director of the Lemon Grove Arts Complex, is shown auditioning some of the students of Vista Grande School in Tierrasanta for roles in this season's "Nutcracker." Over 200 were interviewed. This year's performances will be in the Serra High School Auditorium. Call the Arts Complex for ticket information. Wells is afraid that all performances will be sold out, so book early!

Connolly ready to fight the good fight

by Lindy Magner

A handpainted sign identifying Connolly campaign headquarters in Lemon Grove and another hand-lettered sign in the window announcing "we won!" just about say it all.

Tom Connolly, the no-frills candidate is now Tom Connolly, the 77th district state Assemblyman-elect.

He prides himself on his low campaign expenditures, and attributes his upset of Republican candidate Steve Baldwin to steady, one-on-one campaigning, disputing the political pundits who attribute his victory to Democratic party funds poured into his campaign in the final days.

"When we opened our office, we began walking precincts each day. We really did a terrific job in the first eight months, using every dollar of about $30,000 in an effective fashion," said Connolly.

"About 30 days before the election, the polls indicated that we were within 3 percent of Baldwin; when the Democratic party was informed of our success and the Los Angeles Times portrayed this race as a possible upset, we were then perceived as viable, and they gave us the resources which put us over the top," he said, adding that his opponent still outspent him by $100,000.

He feels that his victory was given to him by voters who crossed party lines not because they were so impressed with him but more because of concerns over his opponent.

"I know that the large number of moderates crossing party lines had more to do with fear of my opponent than my merits. I can't forget that I come from a Republican district and I must vote my district," he said.

A Lemon Grove resident since last January, he explained that his move was purposely to be within the 77th District lines.

"We were living in La Mesa, but we were redistricted out by 1/4 of a mile, so we moved to Lemon Grove," he said, referring to the redrawing of state assembly seat lines about a year ago.

A child advocacy attorney, Connolly explains that his interest in seeking office - which he first unsuccessfully attempted in 1988 - stems from having worked "in the trenches" of the legal system.

"Working in the criminal court system, I see people coming through who didn't really belong there, and wouldn't be, if they had gotten the right break. I don't think an 8 or 9-year-old dreams of being a crack dealer or a prostitute - but when I see them at age 15 or so, that's how they've ended up," he said, recalling cases in which kids with potential were engulfed in trouble.

His goal as an assemblyman will be to insure the funding of youth programs which he sees as preventative measures saving taxpayers considerable money down the road.

"We have to invest in our youth; in the long run, it'll save us the extraordinary cost of incarceration," said Connolly, vice chairman of the California Conservation Corps. He vows to work to reinstate the recent cuts in state funding made to that program, as well as work to develop more ways to provide youths with job skills.

"This is the kind of thing I'll

'Nutcracker' with a twist

This holiday season, more little mice and flowers then ever before will scurry and waltz across the stage during the Lemon Grove Art Complex's holiday production of "The Nutcracker Ballet."

Though director TeresaWells originally began looking for other arts organizations to team up with for this year's production, she wound up with a Tierrasanta elementary school offering her an arrangement which was hard to refuse.

In return for including over 60 Vista Grande Elementary students in her annual production, Wells will receive the use of the Serra High School auditorium as well as the promotion efforts of the PTA.

"This is the way the arts need to go, with communities and schools getting involved. This is a tremendous opportunity for students to work with dance professionals," she said, fresh from a week of auditioning about 200 elementary students for the available roles.

By double-casting the show and packing the scenes with extra mice and other characters, she's been able to accommodate the school's stipulation of using as many students as possible.

Wells will conduct in-school rehearsals for students, separate from regular rehearsals for her own dance students who regularly perform in her holiday production. There will be one joint dress rehearsal before the show opens Dec. 4. Performances run through Dec 6.

This year, her worries about not selling enough tickets for the four performances have turned to worries about overflowing the 300-seat auditorium.

She explained that the elementary school is heavily promoting the production, and taking a majority of the box office sales. But then, she is getting a $500 "assembly fee" for conducting the dance training of the students performing in the ballet.

"This is the best idea I've ever had," she said about the school partnership which she hopes to repeat again with a non-seasonal show and smaller cast.

Also new this year, the ballet will begin with a a narrative section, explaining the plot to novice "Nutcracker"- goers.

A tribute to Ruby

With all due respect to the Lemon Grove Review staff, I just have to think that the passing of Ruby Goodwin deserves more than 10 lines of type.

In March of 1955, when we entered upon the Lemon Grove scene, one of the first couples that Jackie and I met was Max and Ruby Goodwin. As the editor of the Review, at that time, Max introduced me around town, and even sponsored my application for membership in Kiwanis. I recall my first meeting and sitting next to the venerable, and voluble, Dr. Frank Giggliotti. I first thought him a gigantic windbag but Max told me after the meeting that he was truly one of the great ones, and that everything (well, most everything) was actually true.

Over the years it has been our pleasure to count Max and Ruby as our friends, and my poor literary attempts would have to have been inspired by the "Dimmer View" column that everyone enjoyed. It always seemed such a contrast with Ruby and her sparkling smile and Max's dour demeanor. Long ago he informed me that that word was pronounced "doo err" and not as rhyming with sour. His wry wit and jocular humor bounced off Ruby's sunny disposition and her laughing eyes. I have enjoyed dancing with her, and often attending functions where we were seated together. Their children were about the same age as ours and were schoolmates and swim team associates.

Seeing Max seated across the stadium in the press box was a ritual for us when we attended the Charger games. After he retired we gave up our tickets, and only part of the reason was that the team was so awful.

Ruby enjoyed the Chamber of Commerce affiliation, and although we never did buy much from her antique store, she did allow one of my campaign signs in the window one year.

At our age, we have become antiques ourselves, I guess, so that type of merchandise doesn't appeal to us. Actually we look in her window and see stuff that we already have. AND, we think it is current stuff.

It was my pleasure to help her at times with some of her problems there on Broadway, and I will never forget that sweet smile that was ever present on her countenance. Living with Max, it is even more amazing that she could sustain it.

Since Max has abdicated the pastry shop caucus, we have not been in close touch. We miss you Max, and hope that you will consider returning once in a while at least. I very much miss the valuable advice that you always gave me in my public service, and that I would very much like to have with my writing.

After all, I do not want to become dour in my old age. Pray for us, Ruby.

Thanksgiving 1992

by Paul Treske

Perhaps the finest of all of the country's great traditions is the celebration of Thanksgiving. Together with Independence Day it is unique to the American spirit and deeply rooted in the founding history of the nation.

The history we were taught years ago was, unfortunately, often simplistic and made as much of myth as reality. Therefore it is easy for the debunkers and questioners increasingly popular in the second half of this century to raise justifiable questions about much of what we were taught as truth. We now understand that Washington most probably never chopped down that old cherry tree or threw a coin across the Potomac, Rappahannock or any other river (the old gentleman was too frugal for that). We know now that George Armstrong Custer was a fool and a bråggart rather than a great military hero or martyr. And we know now that it was not really Lincoln's primary concern to end slavery, but rather to hold the shattering union together.

In this vein, we also suspect that the Pilgrim fathers rapport with the Native Americans, or lack of same, had little or anything to do with Thanksgiving. When the survivors among the Mayflower settlers held their first day of Thanksgiving in 1621, it was undoubtedly steeped deeply in the religious tradition brought with them from England. It was not actually proclaimed a national holiday until Lincoln did so during his presidency, naming the last Thursday in November as Thanksgiving Day. Franklin Roosevelt changed it to the fourth Thursday in November and Congress did not make it national law until 1941.

Well before that, however, Thanksgiving had anchored itself in the American psyche as this nations quintessential family holiday, and it remains so today. Unlike other of our holidays, it has never been reduced to a day of drunkenness or an orgy of gift-giving. It has retained, perhaps miraculously, the sober and prayerful tone lent to its origin by those Puritans of long ago. It has become like a great and urgent national need for the family, whatever its description or location to come together. It is, in this time of the worship of youth, a time when the role of the patriarch or matriarch of the family becomes significant, and we return, if we can, to the home of our parents or grandparents.

It is a time of giving, unmatched except by Christmas. We want desperately to insure "a Thanksgiving dinner" for all those unable to provide for themselves. For once, we stop begrudging welfare to the unfortunate and man the kitchens of benevolent agencies in order to try to preserve the speciality of the holiday for as many Americans as possible. Schools take up food drives and those more fortunate take time from their own family circle to bring Thanksgiving dinners to those unable to make or reach their own.

But above all, it is a time for family. Those of us lucky enough to have had strong and happy family experiences in our youth, are able to tie the warmth of the remembrance of Thanksgivings past with the celebrations today. Whether today's festive table groans with all the food delights we have come to expect, or is more meager because of recession and joblessness, it is nevertheless the family's table and represents another in the series of Thanksgivings that help to create the "ties that bind."

I shall celebrate with my wife, son and daughter-in-law and grandson here in La Mesa, but our thoughts will include another son in New York as well as a whole array of other relatives and friends, past and present, who are a part of our Thanksgiving. My wishes are that all of you will enjoy the same richness of family love that will be part of our holiday.

From Where I Sit

by Frank Andrews We were adopted

Our church friends have done so much for us since we moved back down to the San Diego area after just a year in Oroville, California.

Thanksgiving crept up on us last season without our realizing because we were so busy redoing our new (old) "honeymoon cottage" and getting ready to move. John called Thanksgiving eve, "Are you folks invited out for Thanksgiving dinner or do you have other plans? How would you like to spend this holiday with our family?"

Willie Marie and I gingerly answered in unison, "We accept!" All of our family are scattered over the country and we had no plans. The other John and family picked us up at the apartment Thanksgiving afternoon and delivered us to the nicest family and the most elaborate, delicious food that we have ever had.

When it was time to move into our new (old) house from the rented apartment in El Cajon, the Lord's troops marched in to take over. My wife packed the boxes with our junk and they loaded all those many boxes, as well as all the furniture, and delivered it to the new residence with the greatest of ease. That was the simplest move we have ever made - and we have had many in our short married life.

One very generous member loaned us his huge van with hydraulic lift. It made moving our huge, two-door Kenmore possible by amateurs. Eventhough the doors had to be removed to get into the house.

The move was on Dec. 18, so, there again, Christmas dinner plans were near forgotten. "No fear, John is here." On this invasion into the families holiday once again was exceeded only by more elaborate, delicious fixings which included nice gifts for Willie and me.

Our 28th wedding aniversary occurred this past fall while we were up in Minnesota visiting a very sick friend. When we arrived back home, we were surprised by our friends with a complete, piping-hot anniversary dinner catered at our house complete with a beautifully decorated pineapple cake. When the group left there were no cleaning up to be done, as everything was left spotless.

How do you ever repay friends for such thoughtful gestures?

I mentioned to this caring family, "We love you all so much that we would be very proud to adopt your whole darn family."

They thought it over a few seconds and answered in unison, "We are all in our forties and we would have to change our last names. We do love you, but think that your idea is really not too practical."

I came back with, "Okay then you can adopt us - but let's face it, having your new kids in your lap may be hazardous to your health."

Life's simple bounties

by Joseph Walker

It didn't take much to make the Pilgrims feel thankful that first Thanksgiving - a few ripe pumpkins, a bushel of corn, a wild turkey that somehow wandered within rifle range. Historical rumor has it that when the Native Americans next door brought squash to the feast, the Pilgrims were actually grateful to receive it. And (shudder!) eat it.

We aren't so easily impressed these days. Most Americans (not all, unfortunately, but most) will have plenty to eat on Thanksgiving - and every other day of the year, for that matter. Life's necessities-food, shelter, clothing and chocolate (not necessarily in that order) - are often taken for granted, leaving us to yearn only for those comparatively few things that we'd really, really, really like to have. Even though we don't really, really, really need them.

But every once in a while something happens to shake us up a bit and help us realize how much we are blessed. Often that "something" is tragic or, at the very least, controversial - like so many of the experiences we've had this year. And while no one would every say that we are glad such things happen, we can at least be thankful for lessons learned and for renewed appreciation of life's simple bounties.

Take water, for example. Aside from oxygen, there is nothing more critical to human survival. Nor is there anything so readily accessible to us-most of the time. But for a few days this year hurricanes in Florida and Hawaii made clean, safe water a precious commodity in storm-ravaged areas. While some of the rest of us were thoughtlessly over-watering our lawns and gardens, hurricane victims were learning the hard way that water is a resource to be savored, not squandered. And something tells me that on some holiday tables this Thanksgiving, generously filled water glasses will be regarded with as much grateful appreciation as the turkey, the dressing or the yams.

Of course, many of those same people will be similarly appreciative of a sturdy, secure roof over their heads. And windows with glass in them. And uncluttered roadways. And privacy. And the delicious privilege of running down to the store to pick up a can of cranberry sauce at the last minute without having to worry about dealing with endless lines and incredible prices.

There's nothing quite like surviving a hurricane for making you truly thankful for simple, everyday stuff like that.

Peace should also be high on the list of things we have learned to cherish through difficult experience. Just two Thanksgivings ago, hundreds of thousands of our compatriots were encamped on the Saudi Arabian desert preparing for battle. During the past year we have watched, horrified, as hostile factions in what used to be Yugoslavia have terrorized and tortured each other in a brutal civil war. While it's true that we have experienced our share of hostility (the Los Angeles riots), terror (the recent wave of violent car-jackings) and brutality (the 1992 election campaign), our crisis have been short-lived and our confrontations, outside of the political arena, that is-relatively few. Please don't misunderstand - I'm not saying we don't need to continue to pray for peace at home and abroad. Those prayers should continue as long as there is cruelty, inhumanity and intolerance between people. But at least we don't have to pray for a world poised on the brink of war. For that we can all be thankful.

More than anything else, however, I hope this Thanksgiving finds you a little more inclined to give thanks for, if not with, your family - wherever and whatever your family may be. We've heard a lot of discussion this year about families and "family values" - some of it hurtful and divisive, if not downright destructive. Nothing could be more inappropriate, because nothing should be more unifying than a family. While we may well disagree as to exactly what "family values" are, none of us can doubt the significance of our own families in our lives. Regardless of our family situation - whether we're old or young, single or married, childless or proudly parental - we are part of a family. And we belong.

And if that sounds like a line straight out of "Murphy Brown" ... well, I'm sorry. It's been a long year, and you can't help but pick up an extra thought here and there. Not to mention something else for which we can be thankful.

Santa to arrive with ski show at Grossmont Center

A "little known" fact about Santa's ability to fly, without the help of Rudolph or his sled, will be revealed at 10 a.m. Nov. 27, when Grossmont Center kicks off the Christmas season by hosting the spectacular Ski Dazzle Acrobatic Ski Show in front of Garden Court Foods.

The three-day Ski Jump Show, sponsored by Snow Summit Ski Resort, will begin with Santa Claus' grand entrance and will continue with 20 minute shows presented approximately every two hours Nov. 27, 28 and 29.

The Ski Dazzle Acrobatic Ski Jump Show features world freestyle champion skiers flying off a 28' high ski ramp on to a 20' x 20' air bag, together with high-flying acrobatics off a trampoline.

It's action-packed excitement for the whole family, complete with music, wild costumes and outrageous comedy.

On giving thanks ... and flowers

Even though every day should be a day for giving thanks for the wonders of life, fine friends and family, and the beauty and goodness that surrounds us, our forefathers set aside this time of year as a special time for giving thanks.

In the spirit of focusing on the good, I want to thank all of you who have called and written supporting thoughts in the recent past. Your response was overwhelming. The encouragement I have felt in hearing from such a number of wholesome balanced folks has restored my faith in the capacity of human kind to put on goodness and kindness. I do truly give thanks for each and every one of you. In a world so full of hate and malice, it is wonderful to know that there are so many that choose to take the higher road.

Anna Barber, was one of the first that I met after moving to Lemon Grove in 1968. She always carried a warm smile and could sincerely ask how you were. One day I asked Anna the basis for her apparent kindness. She replied, "I like to give my flowers to the living!" Her life philosophy obviously impressed me. I'm certain prior to her passing she received flowers in return.

This week we reflected the life of Ruby Goodwin at her memorial service. As I still see her warm and smiling face and encouraging words, I have to give thanks to another who knew how to give and receive flowers.

In the midst of my confusion and pain over the hateful nature that people can manifest, I find myself giving thanks for the warmth, kindness and loving nature of others.

Thank you.

Dr. Jerry Legerton

Buckner appointed to County Water Authority board

Warren Buckner of Lemon Grove has been appointed to the 34-member San Diego County Water Authority (CWA) Board of Directors. Buckner said he was honored by the appointment made by his fellow Helix Water District Board members. He added, "I'm proud to speak for East County residents who deserve full consideration as the County Water Authority balances countywide needs." The San Diego County Water Authority works through its 24 member agencies to serve imported water to 2.5 million customers, a quarter of a million of whom reside in the Helix Water District.

Utilizing his computer management background, Buckner is currently president of the Helix Board and has been elected to the Executive Committee of the statewide Association of California Water Agencies. He was appointed to fill the unexpired term of longtime board member, Nat Eggert. Eggert has been a member of the CWA board since 1977, and a Helix board member since 1954. However, he is not seeking re-election this year and plans to spend more time traveling and seeing family.

San Diego's limited local water supplies, both from runoff and groundwater, have placed ever-increasing importance on imported water supplies. Continued population growth and increased environmental concerns have outpaced the development of water supplies and storage capacities. A current focus of water agencies is to increase the amount of water available within the county during an emergency. Sufficient water storage in the county would make San Diego less vulnerable to the environmental and economic losses that result from a prolonged pipeline outage or severe drought. Other issues requiring thoughtful consideration by CWA board members include alternative water sources such as desalination and reclamation, as well as conservation. Buckner promised to continue to represent the best interests of Helix customers while dealing with countywide issues.

Heartland agencies host awards ceremony

On Saturday, Nov. 14, 1992 the Heartland Fire Agencies hosted a Joint Recognition Ceremony for this year's winners in the National Fire Prevention Week contests held throughout the Heartland area schools. The event took place at the Thomas Owen Heartland Fire Training Facility in El Cajon. Festivities began at 11 a.m., with an awards ceremony, followed by lunch for the winners and their families. About 125 people participated at this event.

Each year Heartland Fire Departments hold coloring, poster and essay contests, and this ceremony recognized the winners of those contests. Doug Curlee of KUSI-TV hosted the ceremony, and celebrities attending included Smokey Bear and Sparky the Fire Dog.

Why not 'stuff a sailor' for Thanksgiving?

The annual "Stuff a Sailor" program asks local families to invite sailors and marines into their homes on Thanksgiving, Thursday, Nov. 26. The process matches families with sailors and marines who are unable to be with friends or their family on Thanksgiving Day.

The families will be asked a few questions about themselves, such as whether they have children or pets, whether they smoke, and, if they are not native San Diegans, what part of the country they come from. This information is used to match families with military personnel of similar interests and background.

Families are to provide transportation to and from the base. For information or sign up, call 556-5706 or 556-5707.

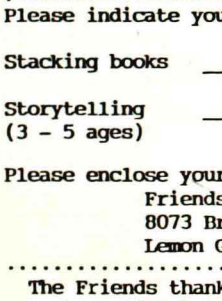
KEEP THOSE BOOKS COMING - ANOTHER BOOK SALE IS SCHEDULED FOR SATURDAY, NOV. 28

Successful book sales at the library, more frequent than in the past, are helping the Friends' treasury funds. Sales are dependent upon donations of books, paperback, hardbound, all kinds of books. Please bring in your accumulated reading material, bagged or boxed, marked "For Friends of the Library" to the Lemon Grove Branch of the San Diego County Library, 8073 Broadway, Lemon Grove.

Our next book sale is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 28, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., and will be on the sidewalk just outside the library's windows. The library will be closed Thursday and Friday, Nov. 26 and 27, so we would like to see those donations by Nov. 25.

Dorothy Geldreich, Elizabeth Lane, and Rosemary Putnam will be sorting books by general category prior to the sale. Members and helpers are asked to arrive at the library by 9 a.m. on Saturday to move tables and boxes of books.



BOOK SALE COORDINATOR POST FILLED BY ROSEMARY PUTNAM

Frequent book sales require coordination of our forces. The Friends have unanimously selected Rosemary Putnam as coordinator of book sales; she will schedule dates and people for the half-dozen sales a year that we expect to have.

NEXT MEETING DATE SET

The next meeting of the Friends of the Library will be Dec. 3, 9 a.m., in the Community Room at the library. (Because of Thanksgiving, meeting has been delayed a week.)

On the agenda are possible plans for December luncheon and nomination of 1993 officers.

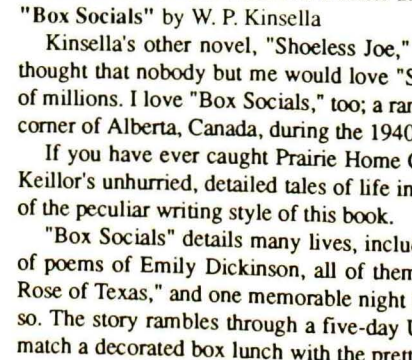
NEW VIDEO TAPES PURCHASED BY FRIENDS

The Friends of the Library have purchased new video tapes to replace others which were purchased earlier and have worn out with frequent use. These were selected by Carol Stanley, branch librarian, and are suitable for children: "Land Before Time," "Chitty, Chitty, Bang Bang," "Rescuers," "Rescuers Down Under," "Dumbo," "Beauty and the Beast," "101 Dalmations," "Great Mouse Detective" and "An American Tale."

The library will be glad to accept donations of used video tapes. Not your home movies, please, but commercial ones that you no longer watch. They will be reviewed for suitability and placed in the "for loan" cabinet. Thanks to the donor of the video on use of the Eurorail pass for travel around Europe; it is being enjoyed by many.

Videos and audio-tapes may be checked out at the desk, just as books are. The books-on-tape are especially good to have on long driving trips when the stations on the car radio all begin to sound alike. There are tapes provided by the Braille Institute for use by the visually impaired. The library also has large-print books on the shelves.



NEED SOME HELP? - ASK THE STAFF!

The library staff at Lemon Grove cannot be topped anywhere. They are cheerful, friendly, and like each other as well as us, the library's patrons. If you are having trouble finding something or using the microfiche, ask the staff. They really are glad to help. Lemon Grove Library staff members are: Carol Stanley, branch librarian, Cathy Heart, branch manager, Barbara Alvarez, Ruth Alcala, Rosa Olea, and Paula Rosete.

At one time we had a children's librarian and a reference librarian, at least part time. Now, Carol Stanley doubles in those roles as well as that of branch librarian, due to cutbacks and budget restrictions.

QUICK REVIEWS OF RECENT BOOKS

Reviewers are Mary Vinson (MV) and Dwight Putnam (DP).

"The Doomsday Conspiracy" by Sidney Sheldon

From the crash of a "weather balloon" in the Swiss Alps, this fast-paced novel hurdles from nation to nation, assassination to assassination, through government conspiracy and personal betrayal. Arrival of visitors from another world provides a touch of sci-fi that is central to the plot but not explored. The story follows the hero as he learns an incredible secret that is shielded by forces within the governments of powerful nations. Of particular interest are the six pages of author's notes at the end of this book in which he notes sightings, verifications, denials, of the existence of UFOs. 8.0 MV

"Dangerous Waters" by Bill Eidson

I guess if you are going to write a murder mystery, you may as well murder almost everybody except the murderer and the main character. Even then, I am a failure in figuring them out until the real last. Lots of clever situations, problems, and subsequent resolution combine to make this a better than average "whodunit." A strong 7.2 DP

"Box Socials" by W. P. Kinsella

Kinsella's other novel, "Shoeless Joe," turned into the movie, "Field of Dreams." I thought that nobody but me would love "Shoeless Joe" and it turned out that I was one of millions. I love "Box Socials," too; a rambling tale of the sparse, rural population in a corner of Alberta, Canada, during the 1940s.

If you have ever caught Prairie Home Companion on radio and listened to Garrison Keillor's unhurried, detailed tales of life in Lake Woebegone, that will give you an idea of the peculiar writing style of this book.

"Box Socials" details many lives, including the Widow Stevenson whose recitations of poems of Emily Dickinson, all of them, could be sung to the tune of "The Yellow Rose of Texas," and one memorable night the entire community discovered this and did so. The story rambles through a five-day Ukrainian wedding, explores in detail how to match a decorated box lunch with the pretty girl who brought it, and visits the meetings of the Farmers Union, where bottles of "bring-on-blindness, logging-boot-to-the-side-of-the-head" homebrew are often passed. 9.0 MV
